THE PLAY

1. Approach your target and introduce yourself. Talk in a strange accent like you've got an ice cube in your mouth or you're Stephen Hawking's robo-voice.
2. When she asks where you're from, pick a place in Europe that everybody has heard of but probably doesn't really exist, like Slovenia or Montevideo* or Belgium.
3. Have sex with her.

WHY DOES THIS WORK?

Women are conditioned to think that Europeans are more sensitive, stylish, and intelligent than Americans. Apparently they value those qualities.

* Editor's note: Montevideo exists in Uruguay, which is in South America, not Europe. Despite maps, almanacs, and an uncomfortable sit-down at the Uruguayan consulate proving otherwise, Barney refuses to acknowledge that Montevideo is not a European country. You try working with him.
