

THE TED MOSBY

Success Rate	5% . . . hey, kinda like Ted!
---------------------	-------------------------------

Attracts	perennial bridesmaids, divorcées, girls who like a mess
-----------------	---

Requirements	tuxedo, eyedrops, wedding ring
---------------------	--------------------------------

Prep Time	eleven minutes
------------------	----------------

Bummers	ring shopping ain't cheap

THE PLAY

1. Put on your tux. Don't you look nice? Like you're about to meet the queen or assassinate someone? Now mess up your tie, untuck your shirt, and go nuts with the eyedrops until your face looks like it does after watching the end of E.T. (the real E.T., not the neutered, lifeless, "let's replace shotguns with walkie-talkies" version Spielberg inexcusably released a few years ago. Hang out with George Lucas much?)
2. Choose a conspicuous space in a public venue and let out a few sighs.
3. Take out the wedding ring and stare at it, spin it on the counter, silently curse it . . . Basically freak out over it like that sickly kid did in The Lord of the Rings.
4. Eventually a woman will take the bait, approach, and ask what's wrong. At first, play it off but then quickly admit that you were just left at the altar . . . left to absorb the humiliating stares of your closest friends and family. You never thought Jen* could do this to you.

5. Pity will drive the bus from there. Just don't forget to get off.

*Naming your "fiancée" helps sell the ruse. "Jen" is a safe albeit familiar choice: studies suggest there are no fewer than 83 million Jens in the United States alone.
